SHIPYARD DISTRICT HISTORIC PROPERTIES SURVEY, PART 2 Marblehead, Essex County, Massachusetts

Final Report

27 September 2018

Abstract

The project conducted an intensive-level survey of historic resources within the Shipyard District in the Town of Marblehead. This project was a high priority in the Town's Historic Resource Survey Master Plan (2013) as the neighborhood is recognized as historically significant and increasingly vulnerable to redevelopment. The goal of the survey is to promote the preservation of these resources by raising public awareness of their significance through detailed and cogent narratives of their individual histories and their role as landmarks in the evolving physical and cultural character of their neighborhoods.

In addition, the local Marblehead Historical Commission (LHC) believes that a higher level of documentation will provide information useful in the evaluation of significance for preservation planning and the town's review of permit applications involving historic properties. The LHC has no direct jurisdiction in project review but hopes survey documentation will lead to informed decisions where significant historic resources are involved. This project, the second of a two-part effort, recorded architectural, historical and photographic documentation for 103 individual properties in the Shipyard District and three areas on inventory forms provided by the Massachusetts Historical Commission (MHC). Individual properties and a historic district that appear eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places have been identified. Together with the results of the first phase of the project, the eligibility of the entire Shipyard District has been addressed.

Methodology:

Survey Objectives. The objectives of the survey were to retrieve information relevant to historic properties, their owners and builders, organize it in narratives that are accessible and informative to a variety of users, and provide assessments of significance that contribute to local and state preservation planning.

Assessment of Previous Research. Very few historic properties outside of the existing historic districts in the town core have been documented, and approximately five of them are located in the Shipyard District. It was this circumstance that prompted the creation of a survey master plan in 2013. A review of local repositories done for the plan revealed little source material pertaining to 19th- and 20th-century development of the town and Marblehead's resort era history. The documentation for the selected properties essentially started from scratch. Local historians Samuel Roads, Jr. (1880s) and Sidney Perley (1910) published sources that contain useful but limited information of the area's early land history and figures active in its 19th-century residential development.

Selection Criteria. A preliminary list of properties was compiled in the Survey Master Plan. The selections were made based on an extant property's representation on atlas of Marblehead published in 1912. In addition, notable buildings erected after that date were selected through visual assessment. In the initial part, properties selected by this standard were limited to two areas, one on Rowland's Hill, which had its own distinctive development history, and another along Hawkes and Barnard streets, where a planned subdivision was platted in 1853. A set of 69 individual properties were selected for inventory forms within these two areas, and inventory forms were created for the two areas as well. A preliminary selection of 115 individual properties for inventory also was made for two areas: the Shipyard Waterfront and the Bassett & Fabens Subdivision to be surveyed in the second part of the project. This list was refined at the initiation of the second, and in the final accounting, B Forms were created for 103 properties and a third area created on Gerry and Pleasant streets.

Procedure. The survey followed the standard methodology set forth in the "Historic Properties Survey Manual" issued and updated by the Massachusetts Historical Commission. The process includes field inspection with on-site notational and photographic recording, archival research, association with architectural and historical contexts, and assessment of significance. Research focused on property owners identified in deeds using historic atlases, city directories, the census, vital records and genealogical sources searchable on Ancestry.com. Local archives and historical sources also were reviewed either in physical repositories or on the Internet. Biographical information on architects and builders were examined where possible using architectural records, newspaper accounts, obituaries and genealogical sources and indexes. The project was planned based on the town's Survey Master Plan (2013) and organized in four phases, the standard scope of work for MHC survey projects.

Products. The products are MHC Building and Area Forms with detailed property and building histories. The 374 properties inventoried are represented on 103 Building Forms and 3 Area Forms. Each form is illustrated with current and, when available, historic views of the property. (All digital photographs taken as part of the project will be conveyed to both MHC and LHC.) A table with property data on each individual building and area will be compiled in a spreadsheet format as an index to the survey and a basis for general analysis and mapping. (A preliminary table is attached.) As part of the project, the LHC will produce a base map showing the locations of the surveyed properties using data provided in this table. A final report also will be prepared providing an overview of the project along with its findings and recommendations for future applications.

National Register Contexts for Evaluation

The properties documented represent a range of historic domestic architecture characterizing the Shipyard District's residential development during the last half of the 19th century when Marblehead's shoe industry attracted scores of families to the town from Ireland, Canada and other New England areas. Shoe manufacturers, house builders and other entrepreneurs bought land between Rowland's Hill and Marblehead Harbor formerly in agricultural, shipbuilding and fishing uses creating subdivisions and erecting "cottage dwellings" for the newcomers. These were preceded by the homes of fishermen and ropemakers built earlier in the century on Rowland's Hill. Early ropewalks along Hawkes and Barnard streets were replaced with house lots platted in 1853. A year earlier, shoe manufacturer Joseph R. Bassett and attorney William Fabens filed a plan for 182 lots on the westerly side of Commercial Street, the original artery connecting Prospect Street with the harbor, on new streets named Central, Chestnut, Walnut and Cottage.

Some of this residential development spilled over into the waterfront area along Gregory and Cliff Streets and vacant land left by fish fence and other maritime-related areas was filled in. The stone wharves that supported shipbuilding and commercial activities remained in limited operation, but recreational yacht clubs and boat yards spread over them. The remainder of the scenic harbor-front property was redeveloped for summer tourists, including fashionable cottages, the small Cliff Inn and the huge Hotel Rockmere (not extant) on Skinner's Point. As Marblehead's summer resort expanded, many of the modest shoeworker cottage dwellings proximate to the harbor on Cliff, Walnut, Gregory and Commercial streets were gentrified. In recent years this trend has spread through the entire neighborhood.

When Atlantic Avenue was extended from Ocean Avenue to Washington Street in 1888, it bisected the neighborhood and prompted the commercialization of real estate along its route, a use that was fully realized in the early automobile era in the 20th century. Prior to this point, the neighborhood was relatively isolated. Over the past century the Shipyard District has experienced losses and alterations to its original urban fabric, but overall it has maintained a high level of historic integrity without the benefit of the preservation controls placed on the old town center. Currently, the neighborhood is in the midst of another wave of renovation as owners of the small-scale historic dwellings are bringing them up to 21st-century living standards. Most of the work has been sympathetic to the neighborhood's historic character, but with ever-increasing real estate values comes concerns for its long-term preservation.

Contexts for evaluation for these properties include the following.

- Architecture. Generally, the examples of 19th-century domestic architecture have significance as distinctive examples of types, periods and methods of construction in the local context. All of them conform to small lots with narrow frontages that were created in subdivisions made by Bassett & Fabens. Exceptions occur in the Shipyard Waterfront Area where lots were created by other landowners.

By the 1840s a new "cottage dwelling" type was introduced as a more systematic plan of development was implemented by shoe manufacturers and entrepreneurs to create housing for shoe workers. These dwellings were generally a story-and-a-half, single-pile center-hall houses with facades facing the street or to one side. Better dwellings had a full second story. In addition, end houses were an option, an updated version of the 18th-century side-passage house. The neighborhood also contains examples of duplexes (although many of the conventional single-family types accommodated multiple families) and other uncategorical houses, as well as later 19th-century and 20th-century types added over time.

Any of the few historic outbuildings that survive are significant architectural features of the properties on which they are located and in any potential historic districts. In particular, shoe shops—ten-footers, large shops and small factories—are rare and important resources and contributing features where they are extant. Two extant livery stables are also significant. Houses that contained stores also have been identified.

Summer resort architecture is another distinctive type that was introduced at the turn of the 20th century along the harbor shoreline as early shipyards, factories and commercial landings diminished in importance and were transformed into boat yards and yacht clubs. Most of these new residences were architecturally distinctive, often architect-designed, as picturesque forms and decoration were part of the programs instituted by their affluent, sophisticated urban owners, many of them yachtsmen. They are concentrated in previously under-developed shoreline areas or perched on escarpments; the Graves family created a compound on aptly-named Harbor View Lane. Pre-existing cottage dwellings with harbor views were renovated by summer residents in summer cottage modes.

Condominium development in both pre-existing and new buildings is a late-20th-century phenomenon associated with Marblehead's summer resort theme. These are generally consistent with the residential scale of the neighborhood. However, one large development is worthy of singular mention. Glover Landing, built in the late 1960s on the site of the Hotel Rockmere and Skinner's Head, is composed of dozens of two-story townhouses designed by architects Allan Chapman and Harold Goyette. Distinctive in its own time, further consideration is needed before including it in a proposed Shipyard Historic District.

The routing of Atlantic Avenue across the neighborhood's street plan in 1888 introduced commercial types into the Shipyard, first adapting existing houses (a few of which survive) and then replacing them with one-story commercial buildings of little distinction. A historic bank and gas station are two properties of significance.

Nearly all the houses surviving from this mid-19th-century period are recognizable in form and design in spite of superficial alterations. Only a few are intact or distinguished enough to be individually eligible for the National Register under the architecture context. However, as a whole, they are authentic and significant enough to contribute to a historic district likely to emerge from this survey.

- Community Planning & Development. The Town created lots on the recompense land on Rowland's Hill in 1726 thus beginning the gradual development of the Shipyard District. Soon after Marblehead fishermen began building houses on the hill. Washington Street and, later, Prospect Street, were the main arterials linking the town center to Salem. Even at this early date, there had been some expansion of the old town into the area of the hay scales at the northeasterly end of Prospect Street. Later, this would become known as Ropemakers Court, perhaps because it served as an early outdoor ropewalk, but it also was where a number of ropemakers lived with their ropewalks in the vicinity.

The open land between Prospect Street and the harbor waterfront was still largely undeveloped agricultural and fish-drying space. Commercial Street, laid out by 1850 connecting Prospect Street with the waterfront, bisected the area. Ropewalks were already in place on the easterly side of Commercial Street; this section would be platted in 1852 with 50 x 100 ft. house lots by Benjamin Hawkes, who was heavily invested in both shoe manufacturing and the fishing fleet. In that same year, shoe manufacturer Joseph R. Bassett and attorney William Fabens filed a plan for 122 house lots on the westerly side of Commercial Street. Both plans were intended to foster residential development by incoming shoe workers, the great majority of them Irish immigrants. These plans, the standardized houses built there, and the community that developed from it is historically significant in this context. This area of significance will be a contributing factor in the eligibility of a historic district.

- Ethnic Heritage. The residential development of the Shipyard District created homes for shoeworkers moving into Marblehead, a large number of whom were immigrants from Ireland or the children of Irish-born parents. The role Irish immigrants played in the industrial history of Massachusetts, not just the shoe industry in Marblehead, Lynn, Salem and the region, is significant and will be a contributing theme in the eligibility of the historic district.
- Industry. While the major shoe factories were located outside the Shipyard District along Pleasant Street, there were shoe shops on domestic properties scattered throughout the Shipyard District where shoes were initially manufactured by individual cordwainers, families, and small unrelated collectives. Until large, mechanized factories appeared after the Civil War, shoe manufacturers relied on a network of shoe makers and small shoe factories to make their products. A number of shoe shops and small factories survive in the neighborhood and are significant components of their properties and the historic landscape of the town.
- Maritime History. Underneath all the mid-19th-century residential development brought on by the shoe industry are the remnants of the maritime associations for which the district was named. That shipyard no longer exists, except for its stone wharf and deep water dock, nor do the ropewalks, drying racks for nets, and fish flakes, but the waterfront area continues in maritime uses and a number of houses, have historical associations with fishermen and ropemakers (many who later became shoemakers) particularly on Rowland's Hill. Gregory Street (the road to the shipyard), Barnard Street (the road between the rope walks), and Prospect Street (Ropemakers' Court) also have associations with this context.

National Register Recommendations

All the properties and areas inventoried in this survey have been recommended for listing on the National Register as contributing features of a potential historic district in the Shipyard neighborhood. The boundaries of this historic district are proposed to follow those of the combined three areas of Hawkes – Lindsey Subdivision Area (MAR.AQ), the Bassett – Fabens Subdivision Area (MAR.AR) and the Shipyard Waterfront Area (MAR.AS). A separate historic district is proposed for the Rowland's Hill Area (MAR.AP), which a recommended amendment including properties on Washington Street between School and Prospect streets. These areas are outlined on the map below. In addition, 21 properties have been recommended as also being individually eligible for the National Register. These properties are so indicated on the street index for the survey.

Further Recommendations

- Present the findings of the survey to the public
- With community support prepare a National Register Nomination for the Shipyard District
- Follow other recommendations prioritized in Survey Master Plan
